

ONLY JEWISH GROUPS PLAN FAMILY SIZE ON ABILITY TO EDUCATE AT COLLEGE

Religious affiliation is the most accurate social indicator of how many children a couple will have, according to a study by the Office of Population Research at Princeton University, reports the New York Times. A preliminary report of the findings was released. The six-year study, called "Family Growth in Metropolitan America," was conducted by Dr. Charles F. Westoff, Jr.; Dr. Robert G. Petter, Jr.; Dr. Philip C. Sag; and Dr. Elliot G. Mishler.

Although data are still being analyzed, Dr. Westoff said it was already clear that "religion is the social attribute of greatest single importance" in determining the number of children desired, the spacing of children, and the choice and effectiveness of contraceptive devices.

The matter of whether a couple is Roman Catholic, Jewish, Protestant or of mixed religion is more decisive than the husband's job category, the family's economic level, or any of approximately seventy other "socio-economic attitudes and personality variables," Dr. Westoff said.

"For example, Jews who were interviewed begin contraception earliest after marriage, use the most effective methods, have the longest birth intervals, and report fewer unplanned pregnancies," he said. "Roman Catholics are at the opposite extreme of this pattern, and Protestants are in the middle."

Approximately the same number of children are desired by couples of mixed religion, but the study found that Jewish couples are more likely to have a second child than couples of other religions.

Dr. Westoff said, Catholics wanted the largest families, and Jews the smallest.

In mixed Protestant-Roman Catholic marriages, the number of children desired by couples who were married by a priest fell on the average between the numbers desired by Protestant and Roman Catholic couples, says the New York Times. Those not married by a priest expressed preferences identical with those of Protestant couples.

Among Roman Catholic couples, however, the study revealed sharp differences between number of children desired and those they actually had. This difference was related to whether the couple's education was predominantly in religious or in secular institutions.

Family goals of Roman Catholic couples educated in secular schools are more like those of Protestants than like those of their fellow Catholics, the study indicated.

The survey also showed, Dr. Westoff reported, that "caution, with heavy emphasis upon education, appears to be the main factor relevant to the fertility of Jewish couples."

"It is only among the Jewish groups that couples consistently refrain from desiring additional children in the family because they want to be able to send them to college," he said.

One factor affecting the number of children Protestant couples prefer is the concentration of the religious community. If they do not have a large community, they are more likely to have a second child.

Dr. Westoff interviewed 1,100 couples in 1957, four to seven months after the birth of their second child. The same couples were interviewed again last spring as a check on how well we were able to forecast the timing and occurrence of the third pregnancy," according to the report.

The sponsor of the study is the Milbank Memorial Fund. Grants have been provided by the Carnegie Corporation and the Population Council, Inc., says the New York Times. The initial findings will be published by the Princeton University Press.

Soviet Claims Bonn Tries To Ease Lot Of Elite Guard Killers

The Soviet Union accused the West German Government of preventing the presentation of essential evidence at the trial of twelve former Nazi S.S. men charged with committing war crimes in Byala-Russka, in Coblenz, West Germany, says the New York Times. Testimony has been heard from Germans and witnesses brought from several foreign countries, including Israel.

The chief defendant is Georg Heuser, who was arrested while serving as a police official in the West German administration. Heuser and his fellow defendants are charged with complicity in the murder of thousands of civilians, mostly Jews, in the region of Minsk during the Nazi occupation.

Leonid N. Zamyatin, chief of the Press Department in the Soviet Foreign Ministry, told a news conference that the West German Government had refused to permit Soviet witnesses and lawyers to attend the trial.

Mr. Zamyatin said, "This decision cannot be assessed otherwise than as a desire on the part of certain West German quarters to pay down the scope of the Coblenz trial to avoid giving it a correct appraisal and to alleviate the lot of the S.S. criminals." The S.S. was Hitler's elite guard.

The Soviet official said it had been the intention of witnesses to present testimony and to submit documents proving that the accused are guilty of crimes against humanity and that they were participants in the Holocaust.

Representatives of the Byala-Russka Commission for the investigation of war crimes and by Soviet citizens. These citizens stated that they had witnessed the Nazi mass murders and that the Coblenz defendants participated.

Charging that the Coblenz proceedings had been so organized as to "whitewash the defendants," Mr. Zamyatin said the news conference had been called to expose them as "perpetrators of grave crimes" who were being protected by highly placed persons.

Began At 15, Became "Statesman Of Finance"

Jerome Lewine, senior partner of H. Hents & Co., members of the New York Stock Exchange, died in New York at Mount Sinai Hospital, in his seventy-eighth year. Mr. Lewine maintained residences in White Plains and at 480 Park Avenue in New York.

Known widely as one of the elder statesmen of the financial district, Mr. Lewine began his association with the Hents concern in 1900 as a boy of fifteen. He was born in Brooklyn on February 4, 1885, the son of Joseph and Iona Lewine, but spent his boyhood in Waco, Texas.

Before he was nineteen, Mr. Lewine was representing the Hents Company on the floor of the New York Produce Exchange, and by the time he was twenty-three he was a governor of that exchange, says the New York Times. He became a partner in 1916 and on the retirement of the late Henry Hents in 1918, Mr. Lewine became senior partner.

In that same year, the Hents concern recognized the growing public interest in the securities market and obtained membership in the New York Exchange through a merger with the brokerage firm of Baruch Brothers, which had been organized in 1899. Mr. Lewine and Dr. Herman B. Baruch were senior partners of the merged firm for many years.

The head firm, which did strictly a commission-house business until 1900, today covers every aspect of the securities business and maintains offices in Boston, Chicago, Pittsburgh, Detroit, Miami Beach, Beverly Hills, Calif., and in Dallas and Houston, Texas. The firm also maintains offices in London, New York, and San Francisco.

Mr. Lewine was instrumental in organizing the New York Rubber Exchange and other commodity exchanges. In 1929 he became the first president of the new Commodity Exchange.

Says Most Serious Threat To U.S. Religious Freedom Is Break-Up Of People's Moral Sense

The "legend of the 'Founding Fathers' of Christian America... is a lie, which is used to justify sometimes bad citizenship and degenerate religion," a religious conference was told in Washington, D.C., in an attack on early New England church leaders.

The speaker was Dr. Franklin H. Littell, professor of Church History at the Chicago Theological Seminary, says the New York Herald Tribune, and he was addressing 120 scholars, educators, clergymen, and public officials at the First National Institute on Religious Freedom and Public Affairs.

Dr. Littell said: "Protestants must forever bury the pernicious legend of the 'Founding Fathers'." He added that the liberty these New England leaders sought was for their own brand of religion and that they persecuted persons of other faiths.

The Institute is a project of the National Conference of Christians and Jews and financed by the Ford Foundation.

Such controversial topics as birth control, the Supreme Court's decision on prayer in public schools, Christmas pageants in schools, Federal assistance to certain elements of parochial school procedures, shared time, and the recent racial crises in the South, are among many explored by the delegates.

Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Anthony J. Celebrezze addressed a dinner and at a luncheon the chief speaker was Brooks Hays, Special Assistant to President Kennedy.

Dr. Littell, a member of the American Unitarian Council, reports the New York Herald Tribune, said that secularists, i.e., laymen, courts, and government officials, have done more to promote religious liberty in the U.S. than religious groups have done.

The Rt. Rev. John Tracy Ellis, professor of church history at the Catholic University of America, said the most serious threat to religious freedom in the United States is not the insistence of any one religious group in pursuance of its objectives and in defiance of citizens of other faiths, but is rather "the gradual and steady disintegration of the moral sense of the people."

Magr. Ellis added that Roman Catholic teachings upon such subjects as birth control, abortion, censorship of books and films, and the majority Catholic view on federal aid for parochial schools are in conflict with the position of many Americans and will undoubtedly cause some tensions. But, he added, that charitable concern and courteous consideration of their fellow citizens is the best guaranty of the continuance of religious freedom in America.

The Institute opened with a reception to 500 delegates by Dr. Lewis Webster Jones, president of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, and a former president of Rutgers University, says the New York Herald Tribune. At this reception Dr. Jones sounded the Institute's keynote by saying

U.N. Negotiator Fails To Break Arab-Israeli Deadlock, Resigns

Dr. Joseph E. Johnson has resigned after ten months of trying to persuade the Arab states and Israel to adopt a new approach toward settling the Palestine refugee problem. He took on the United Nations negotiating effort last spring and conducted talks at the U.N. and in the Middle East, says the New York Times. He intends to return to his full-time position as president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace.

His resignation means apparently that intensified efforts will be made to work through the usual diplomatic channels rather than through an individual negotiator. This will be undertaken in the Middle Eastern countries but primarily in Washington, since the United States has taken the lead in pushing for a settlement.

Many diplomats at the U.N. have been expecting Dr. Johnson to leave the picture at least for now since it has been clear that neither the Arab states nor Israel gave his proposals any encouragement. Opposition from both, in fact, led to an argument during the recent General Assembly session not to publish his proposals officially, although the general lines became known.

In essence, he advised a new formula for seeking permanent homes for the Arabs who were uprooted by 1948 Palestine War and who have been living in the Arab states that border on Israel. Among other ideas, he proposed that refugees be given opportunities to express a preference for several alternatives: repatriation to Israel or resettlement in the Arab lands or elsewhere.

The proposals, however, apparently did not alter the basic positions of either side, the Arab insistence that the refugees be repatriated to Israel, and Israel's just as strong rejection of this for security and economic reasons.

Diplomatic sources believe that the Johnson mission served as a preparatory step and suggested that he might at some time take on a further negotiating effort.

However, for the moment, there will be renewed and stronger emphasis on private negotiations

Music In The Synagogue, Past And Present

There are three types of loans: secured, unsecured, and guaranteed.

It was the object of the Priests to produce an awe-inspiring atmosphere so that the people would respond with warmth and fervour. However, one of the reasons for the institution of the Synagogue was the desire to break away from this priestly monopoly, but the need for a leader in prayer was still felt. He was called Sabbat-teubir — the messenger of the community — who not only recited the benedictions and chanted the passages from the Pentateuch, but Having now given the main facts, I am in a position to review the state of Synagogal music as it affects the present-day Reform and Liberal movements in England. This is not an easy task, because the opportunities for making music will vary with the size and type of congregation and — to be practical — with its financial resources. As Music Director of the Liberal Jewish Synagogue, I naturally think of my own problems first, but I believe that this, the largest Synagogue of its kind, should set the example and lead others. It is my opinion that the Liberal movement, in its early days, made similar mistakes with the new Reform movement in Germany, and that too much of the old tradition had been swept aside in favour of the new.

Let it be said that, with every sweeping change in art, literature or music, a reaction sets in. So after Rationalism comes Romanticism, which in turn is followed by Neo-Classicism. I therefore asked myself, "Is it time for the return of the Chazzan, the Lewandowsky type, such as exists already in Paris?" As a student of musical history, I should not like to see the art of cantillation die, in the same way as many Church authorities seek to keep alive the singing of Plain Chant. An occasional short passage would be enough to preserve the tradition. I am far from ignoring the organ and choir as being great assets in beautifying the service. As for the choir, we have progressed (some might say retrogressed) in that they sing more of Lewandowsky, Sulzer, Naumbourg, and others, but I do not suggest that great compositions in Western style should be entirely eradicated, where the choir is able to tackle them.

Let me now return to my comment about worship in the early Temple and the participation of the congregation. This was admittedly not very extensive, but there was a great fervor behind it, however much stimulated by ritual. It is my belief that most people have a touch of mysticism in them and are eager to respond when suitably stimulated. Some Progressive congregations have no choir worth speaking about, yet they respond and sing together in a way which is most impressive. Others, with a full choir and organ, seem to take only a passive interest. They explain that the key is too high, or that they do not know the tunes.

It is perhaps that the entry of new members from different environments causes them to become too reserved to take an active part? Or is it that attendance is not regular enough to familiarise many congregants with the music? The quotation over our Ark says, "Serve the Lord with gladness" and to do this the congregation must feel fully at ease. If this cannot happen with the present generation, it is an urgent duty to see that the children grow up knowing the music and procedures of the modern Progressive service. Choir and organ may produce fine music, the Minister may be inspiring but it is only when choir, minister and Congregation worship and pray to-

Argentine Jewry And Its Inseparable Companion, Fear

BY DAVID BEN-MONDECHAY ALIEN

The Buenos Aires Jewish community, which consists of 880,000 members (the largest section of Argentine Jewry) is the second largest in the Diaspora and one of the few outstanding examples of communal organization, of activity, and of ardent Jewish consciousness.

Despite the shattered economy of the State, the majority of Argentine Jewry is well established and those few community members who have not yet succeeded in achieving economic independence are very efficiently and at the same time very constructively supported not only by the local Jewish institutions but also by the more affluent individuals of Argentine Jewry, who on the whole have an open heart and purse.

Using its own resources only, the Buenos Aires Jewish community has achieved even more than could be expected of it. Hardly any of the local Jewish youth attend non-Jewish schools. No Jewish children are to be found in other than Jewish kindergartens. Many youth meeting centres, clubs, camps, and organizations have scheduled weekly activities, led by reputable members of the community who devote a great deal of time, energy, and finance for the upkeep of those educational and social facilities for the Jewish youth. Every Jewish school, even the non-Zionist, features Hebrew and topics concerning Israel.

There is a great and eager demand for Jewish spiritual and educational leaders and a considerable number of lecturers and teachers on permanent contracts are annually being imported from Israel, U.S.A., and Great Britain.

An elaborate Jewish press is maintained and a flood of Jewish books by world-famous as well as by obscure Jewish writers is annually printed in Buenos Aires; manuscripts are sent in from all over the Jewish world; a separate section specializes in educational volumes, short stories, poems and translations from Hebrew and English alike.

The network of Jewish libraries in Argentina is presently undergoing a process of intensified expansion and supplies of Jewish books on almost every aspect of life are provided as donations by the Jewry of Buenos Aires to libraries such as the newly-established Central Jewish Library in Rio de Janeiro in memory of the Warsaw Ghetto Heroes, and the Jewish library in La Paz (Bolivia).

A Yiddish theatre is catering for a large and eager public, adapting for the stage a considerable number of Jewish books. It also features many new plays by young Jewish playwrights as well as Jewish classical plays. Recently there were performances of Di Machasheffe, Tevye der Milchiker, Der Ferkishifter Shneider, Hundert Toyzend Guldens, Motke der Ganev, and Yiftah's Tochter.

A wide network of Jewish clubs and various social meeting centres are being maintained. A lecture on almost any aspect of Judaism is always not only a welcome, but also, a celebrated event. A Jewish holiday, whether religious or national, is observed with devotion and there is a tender, warm response to Zionism.

As extraordinary as it may seem — the pulse of the Jewish community of Argentina is the Israel Embassy. The Israel Ambassador to Argentina, and his diplomatic staff, residing in a comfortable, almost luxurious building, a gift from a group of prominent local Jews, are ever busy with guidance and advice on all Jewish matters.

The Israel Embassy seems to be the backbone of Argentine Jewry, Israel — their faith; and if the elder members of the Argentine Jewish community feel that it is already too late for them to immigrate to Israel and begin re-establishing themselves there, a large number of them encourage the youth to go to Israel.

The local Jew is recognized by the look in his eyes. This look contains nothing of the Australian "punch" or the secure British benevolence; nor has it any of the American flush of self-confidence or the Israeli pertness. It is a look of fear. Fear that has been an inseparable companion of Argentine Jewry throughout the last three decades.

It cannot be said that Argentine Jewry suffered a great deal more than the Argentine population as a whole under the constant tension and terror of the pre-Peronistic instabilities and under Peronistic dictatorship. But factors such as the envious hatred of the illiterate towards the Jew, and the stiff intolerance of the Church-controlled pre-Peronistic government, or the neo-fascism of wartime Argentina, as well as the great number of Nazis that found asylum in Peronistic Argentina after the second world war, undermined the confidence of Argentine Jewry.

Despite the largely advertised favours that Peron granted to his Jewish citizens, he never really succeeded in convincing them that the anti-Semitic measures in the earlier days of his reign were a matter of the past; never for a moment did the local Jew really accept this. Concealing their fear behind the stereotyped smile expected by the Peronists — the Jews of Argentine constantly awaited further outbursts of anti-Semitism.

Furthermore, this constant lack of stability isolated Argentine's Jewish citizenry from the Catholic-pervaded culture of the country as well as from the culture implements of the Peronistic 'Justicialismo' thus compelling the Jewish community not only to retain a great deal of the rhythm and habits of the various parts of Europe from which it originally derived but also to contradict the well-known and accepted Jewish characteristic of intensive participation in the activities of the land of residence.

Thus, Argentine Jewry (with the exception of the few Jewish Peronists) has almost completely withdrawn from Argentina's political life and has gradually sought sanctuary for its spirit in Yiddish culture or Zionism, in identity with Israel and religious observance which — as a whole — may strongly motivate the intensity of the community's strenuous self-organization.

The political passivity of the local Jewry reaches extremes.

SOVIET CLAIMS BONN TRIES TO EASE LOT OF ELITE GUARD KILLERS

Documents and photographs were exhibited purporting to incriminate the Coblenz defendants in the murders of hundreds of thousands of persons. Many of the facets of the charges made at the conference have been explored in the lengthy testimony at the Coblenz trial, says the New York Times. Konstantin Korschuk, a member of the Byelo-Russian Commission, stated that nearly 500,000 civilians were killed during the Nazi invasion of the Soviet Republic.

United Jewish Appeal, and the Brooklyn Jewish Hospital, of which he was an honorary trustee. He was a member of the Harmony Club, the Sunningdale Country Club, the Wall Street Club, the Lands, and the Marco Polo Club. Mr. Lewine married the former Miss Norma Riess in 1910. Mrs. Lewine died in December of last year, says the New York Times. A son, Jerome, Jr.; and a daughter, Mrs. Mina L. Masback, of Scarsdale, New York; and six grandchildren survive.

the program will focus on present-day practices of religious groups and how these religious groups wield their political power on issues that concern them in the realm of politics.

U.N. NEGOTIATOR

with the parties concerned to determine if, and under what conditions, they would consider repatriation to Israel or resettlement in the Arab world on a permanent basis, with compensation for their losses.

The United States has financial reasons for pushing for a settlement, apart from the obvious interest in resolving both the humanitarian and persisting political problem. For the refugees, the United States has contributed $291,268,000 since 1950.

When asked about Peron all they have for an answer is: "We are grateful that he let us live." After Peron was succeeded by General Leonardi, there was no real joy amongst the Jews. "The Argentinians may rejoice" — they interpreted their indifference, "but we are Jews. And besides — one never knows what is going to happen to-morrow."

There is some truth in that approach. It is difficult to predict what will be the attitude towards local Jewry. It may, however, be assumed that as long as Argentina's political, economic, and social structure are not finally stabilized, the Jewish community will act very wisely if it will retain its present policy of intensifying its activity of its own communal institutions.

Friedman, president, and Mrs. Friedman; Mr. and Mrs. Julius Hayman, Mr. and Mrs. David E. Newman, Alvin Rosenberg, Q.C., and Mrs. Rosenberg, Mr. and Mrs. J. Sydney Midanik. "Is The Zionist Movement Obsolete?" was debated by: Alvin Rosenberg, Q.C., former campaign chairman, and co-chairman of advance gifts committee, of the United Jewish Appeal; and J. Sydney Midanik, chairman of the Joint Community Relations Committee, Central Region, for the affirmative; Julius Hayman, president of Ontario Zionist Region; David E. Newman, Q.C., member of the national executive, and honorary vice-president, of the Zionist Organization of Canada, for the negative. Rabbi Stuart E. Rosenberg was moderator. Questions were: Has the establishment of the State of Israel rendered the Zionist Movement impotent as a vital, creative force in Jewish Life? Is a separate Zionist movement necessary for the promotion of the support of Israel or can this be done as well, or even better, by other Jewish agencies? Can a revitalized Zionist movement deepen the cultural ties between the Jews of Israel and the Jews in the Diaspora? Can pro-Israel sentiment replace the deeper loyalties of the committed, historical movement which is Zionism? The debate was won by the negative. About two hundred guests were present. Rabbi Rosenberg said that the question is still debatable, and that this does not vindicate the Zionist Organization from self-examination in facing up to new tasks in a changing world. Three Major Tasks For The Zionist Organization Of America To Be A Vital Force

BY DR. MAX NUSSBAUM, PRESIDENT OF Z.O.A.

That the unification of the American Zionist movement has now become a determining factor in the strengthening of the entire world Zionist movement was conveyed succinctly and in definitive terms at the recently-concluded Jerusalem sessions of the World Zionist Actions Committee, the ruling body of the World Zionist Organization, by Moshe Sharet, former Israeli Prime Minister, and now chairman of the Jewish Agency Executive, in the following words:

"We all know the Achilles' heel in the movement, it is the United States of America. A basic change must set in the structure of the Zionist Organization of America, and a departure in the recognition, by individual Zionists and organizations alike, of the functions of the Zionist movement at present. For the United States is not like Australia, for example. One cannot conceive of a strong Zionist movement without one central Zionist Organization in the United States. . . . Unless there is a uniform Zionist movement in America, it is in vain to fall back on Zionist Organizations in other countries. Without one movement, there will not be a universal body to serve as a link between the Jewish world in the Dispersion and the State of Israel."

Mr. Sharet has thus put his finger on the crux of the most important problem facing American Zionism today. A uniform American Zionist Organization, or to use the exact term, a United Zionist Organization of America, is now of paramount need for reinvigorating the entire Zionist movement. It is vital for the successful and effective implementation of a program which would make an impact upon the American Jewish community and draw into the Zionist orbit a whole new group of Jewish leadership which, through the U.J.A. and Israel Bonds activities, has come very close to Israel, but has failed to take the final step toward total identification with it by joining the Zionist movement.

It is a significant coincidence that we are now observing the 100th anniversary of the birth of Professor Richard Gottheil, who served as first President of the Federation of American Zionists from 1897 to 1904, which, in later years, evolved as the Z.O.A. The Federation of American Zionists represented for many years not only those whom we call the General Zionists, but all groupings within the Zionist movement. As late as 1903, at the sixth annual convention of the Federation held in Boston, delegates who attended included those of other parties such as Mizrahi and Labor Zionists. The division of the movement into many parties was a later development or, in terms of history, of recent origin.

At this crucial juncture when we, as American Zionists, by our decisions and actions, exert a decisive influence on the fate of the entire Zionist movement throughout the world, we should give serious thought to returning to the original unity which the first Federation of American Zionists anvisioned in its own time. There is no gainsaying the fact that the major tasks devolving upon us on the American scene in the fields of Hebrew education, personal ties between the American Jew and Israel and selective Aliyah, does not involve any party ideology and has almost nothing to do with party structure.

The three major planks of our Zionist program, which give a raison d'être to our organization and to the movement as a whole, can be implemented only by a unified Zionist movement, with a single voice in America speaking on behalf of our great movement. Such a unified organization would enable the Z.O.A. to rejuvenate its districts and regions, inject new blood into its organism, and convert our organization into a truly powerful force for Israel and the cultural enrichment of our own community here.

Thus, if we are earnestly concerned about the future of the Zionist movement both here and abroad, then the call of the hour is unification on all levels. This implies a united Zionist Organization of America within its own ranks, winning back into its fold all those who have left it; a united Zionist movement on the American scene, with the Z.O.A. playing the major role, and unification of the two Confederations of the General Zionists, which is so long overdue.

Let there be a misunderstanding, it should be made clear that a united Z.O.A., concerned with the carrying out of a program of action devoid of party ideology, will not effect the autonomy of the present parties within the movement including those of the General Zionists. In my view, the following are the three major tasks which comprise the program of the Z.O.A., if it is to continue to serve as the major instrumentality of the Zionist movement and a vital force in Jewish life:

1. Intensification of Hebrew education, in all its aspects, both adult and in the schools, encompassing the establishment of Chairs for Hebrew education in many universities throughout the country, an exchange of Hebrew educators and students between Israel and America; support for the Herzliya Hebrew Teacher's Institute (which I am happy to note will be soon chartered as the Goodman-Herzliya College under the sponsorship of the Tarbut Foundation headed by Dr. Emanuel Neumann); and the promotion of many other Hebrew educational projects in cooperation with existing Hebrew Educational Institutions.

2. The establishment of personal ties between the American Jew and Israel on all levels, ranging from tourism to investments, and the promotion of studies by our young people for periods of one or two years in Israeli institutions.

3. A selective voluntary Aliyah of some 6,000 American Jews a year in keeping with the reasonable estimate of one for each thousand among the 6,000,000 Jewish population in the United States.

Approach the question of Aliyah from America, after a discussion

URGES U.N. STUDY OF HOSTILITY AND INCITEMENT TO VIOLENCE

The World Jewish Congress has urged the United Nations to institute a study of measures to be taken for the cessation of any advocacy of national, racial, or religious hostility that constitutes an incitement to hatred and violence jointly or separately. The proposal was made by Dr. Maurice L. Perle, Permanent Representative of the organization at the United Nations, to the UN's Subcommission on Prevention of Discrimination and Protection of Minorities.

The Subcommission considered proposals for future work. One by Morris Abram (U.S.), Justice Abu Rannat (Sudan), and Mr. Santa Cruz (Chile), proposed "a study of equality in the administration of justice, in accord with Article 10 of the Universal Declaration."

Substantially the same proposal had been circulated on behalf of six non-governmental organizations, which included the World Jewish Congress and the Consultative Council of Jewish Organizations. The second proposal, submitted by Mr. Ivanov (USSR), was a resolution in favor of "a study of measures to be taken for the cessation of any advocacy of national, racial, or religious hostility that constitutes an incitement to hatred and violence jointly or separately."

Dr. Perle urged the Subcommission to consider the desirability of undertaking both studies which he considered to be crucial to the implementation of the principles which had already been formulated dealing with discrimination in various fields of human rights. In regard to Mr. Ivanov's proposal, he pointed out that this had been on the agenda for several years and he pleaded that the problem of incitement, to which the World Jewish Congress attached great importance, should be the subject of a thorough and objective examination uninfluenced by the diplomatic conflict in the contemporary world.

with many members of the Israeli government, including Premier Ben-Gurion and other leaders of the community, the consensus among them was that no mass Aliyah from America is to be expected. Mr. Ben-Gurion shared the view that an Aliyah from 5,000 to 6,000 American Jews a year would be a commendable goal under the circumstances.

A moratorium must be declared to the public polemic between Mr. Ben-Gurion and American Zionist and Jewish leaders on the definition of Zionism, Judaism, and on the time and extent of Jewish survival in America. A halt should also be called to the defensive and apologetic attitude on the part of American Zionists with regard to their status and responsibility. The continued interchange of what can be aptly described as unconstructive polemics is both futile and without purpose.

Let us remember two indisputable facts which cannot be glossed over: Israel is the child of the Zionist movement, the creation by the sweat, blood, and tears of Zionist pioneers, among whom Mr. Ben-Gurion was a leading figure; and that the Zionist Organization, which is here to stay, has a vital task to fulfill, to nurture and safeguard the security of its historic creation and to further creative Jewish living in America, and also other lands of the Diaspora (Dispersion).

While we are proud of the democracy inherent in our movement, the protracted dragging out, month after month, year after year, of the debate with Mr. Ben-Gurion, who, by his own admission, expresses his views as an individual and not as Prime Minister of Israel, can no longer serve a useful purpose. A dialogue over a period of fourteen years with Mr. Ben-Gurion as an individual has, you all will agree, reached a point of saturation. Let us continue the dialogue with the people of Israel but afford their revered leader, whom all of us here admire and recognize as one of the greatest figures of our times, a respite in the great debate. Practical work, the adoption and implementation of a comprehensive program must take the place of debates.

"I am a man of the West, and a child of its tradition," said Dr. Perle, "and the right to freedom of speech is one of the most precious values in that heritage. Mr. Ivanov comes out of a totally different environment and tradition, but it is part of the fundamental purpose of this Subcommission to seek to deal with common problems and to find for them solutions on which the international community can unite."

Dr. Perle said that concern with the problem of incitement was not limited to the followers of any one ideology. He named Western countries that had enacted legislation to deal with the problem, among them Austria, Denmark, Greece, Italy, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden and Switzerland, and he pointed out that India had similar provisions in its penal code. The need was to reconcile the unfettered and legitimate exercise of freedom of speech with restraint of those who sought to use it for the purpose of ultimately destroying it. It was admittedly a difficult problem, but the Subcommission was qualified by its terms of reference and its composition to make an important contribution to the advancement and protection of human rights.

He recalled the situation in Germany during the late 20's when the democratic parties hesitated to enact legislation or to take appropriate measures to deal with the rising tide of incitement to hatred and violence, which finally overwhelmed democracy and, abusing the institutions of a liberal regime, gave the West an exhibition of horror without parallel in modern history.

Incitement to racial and religious hatred could not only have grave consequences, but its immediate effects were not to be overlooked. In some democratic countries it is possible for a Nazi to parade the streets with placards announcing: "Jews to the concentration camps"; or even, "Jews to the gas ovens."

Women Was A Founder Of World Union Of Liberal Judaism

The death of the Hon. Miss Lily H. Montagu, of London, England, on January 22, came at the age of 89 years in a London hospital. She had fallen in her home several days earlier. She was the honorary life president of the World Union for Progressive Judaism; of the Union of Liberal and Progressive Synagogues (Great Britain); of the London West Central Jewish Day Settlement; Lay Minister of the West Central Liberal Jewish Congregation, and prominent in many other organizations.

Miss Montagu was born in London, December 22, 1878, the daughter of Sir Samuel Montagu, the first Lord Swaythling, an eminent financier, statesman, and leader of English Orthodox Jewry. Early in her life she adopted a modernist interpretation of Judaism, and while in her teens had already organized and led young people in prayer groups. At 19 she founded the West Central Jewish Club for Girls and later the Maude Nathan Home for Little Children. She was strongly influenced by the religious thought of Claude G. Montefiore, and together with him established the Jewish Religious Union and the Liberal Jewish Synagogue. Miss Montagu became a renowned preacher, and was the Lay Minister of her own congregation.

Her efforts were largely responsible for the first International Conference of Liberal Judaism, which met in London in 1926 and which resulted in the creation of the World Union for Progressive Judaism. From the beginning she was the honorary secretary of the World Union, and as such its actual administrator until after World War II. Following the death of Dr. Leo Baeck she became in 1934 the third president of the World Union, and in 1960 was succeeded by the incumbent president, Dr. Solomon B. Froch.

In 1966 Miss Montagu was awarded an honorary Doctor of Hebrew Letters by the Hebrew

The Honorable Edwin Herbert Samuel, who just succeeded to the title of Viscount in the British Union College in Cincinnati, Ohio, one of the few women ever so honored. She received the Order of the British Empire in 1937 for her outstanding social work and in 1956 was made Commander of the British Empire for her service to Jewish organizations. She was one of the first women in England to be Justice of the Peace and for many years was a magistrate in the Borough of St. Pancras and an esteemed member and chairman of the London Juvenile Courts. Miss Montagu was long considered the outstanding religious personage in the field of social work in the British Isles. She was a founder of the Women's Industrial Council, and officer in the National Council of Women, and active in the National Association of Women Workers. She was a founder of the National Organisation of Girls' Clubs, and of the London Society of Jews and Christians. Miss Montagu was one of the two honorary life members of the board of the National Federation of Temple Sisterhoods, the American Reform Jewish women's organization.

Her writings were numerous, and included a biography of her father, Samuel Montagu. She is survived by two sisters, the Hon. Miss Marian Montagu, and the Hon. Mrs. Henrietta Franklin, both of London.

House of Lords on the death of his father, Herbert Samuel, Britain's first High Commissioner of Palestine, at the age of ninety-three years, will be a special guest at the national inaugural conference for Israel Bonds on March 8, in Miami, Florida. The new Lord Samuel, who spent most of his life in Palestine and Israel after the proclamation of the independence of the Jewish State, is an author, expert in public administration, and a visiting professor at the Graduate School of Public Affairs at the State University of New York.

Samuel Rothberg, national chairman of the conference, declared that the visit of Lord Samuel would provide the opportunity for the Jewish leaders gathered in Miami to hear the story of Israel from distinguished international leaders. The conference will launch the 1968 Israel Bond campaign for $75,000,000.

Viscount Samuel, who will take his seat in the House of Lords within the next few months, was the founder and principal of the Institute of Public Administration in Israel. He has also been a lecturer on Political Science at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. Prior to the establishment of the State of Israel he was associated with the British Civil Service in which he served during the period from 1920 to 1948. When not traveling, Viscount Samuel divides his time between Britain and Israel where he maintains a residence.

The Hon. Trygve Lie, first secretary-general of the United Nations; and U.S. Senator Hubert H. Humphrey will join the conference, for the celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of Israel.
